typical pacing · real timelines vary with restoration lead times

Master artisan — 40h/week. Every saddle-stitch, every edge finish, every client's ticket in ink.

Apprentice — 20h/week. Beeswax, edge-bevel, ledger, espresso.

Two pairs of hands. One bench. Forty years of practice, twenty of learning.

Petra · 34 · Šiška

her mother's 1970s shoulder-bag. She doesn't want a new one. She wants this one.

Jure · 46 · Vič

refuses to buy another briefcase; his first one one has outlasted two jobs and a marriage.

Mila · 72 · Trnovo

brings her late husband's wallet every spring for conditioning. A small ritual.

individual stories, a shared value: enduring craft

Instagram

slow, candle-lit, craft-first.

Reels: a single saddle-stitch in extreme macro. Stories: the ledger page with a new name.

Ljubljana post

written letters.

Once a month, a cream envelope to every client: ‘your bag misses you; con a free conditioning.’

Word of mouth

the cat on the chair does the talking.

Every repair leaves with a dust-bag that carries the shop shop into offices, schools, trains.

Trnovo neighbourhood part of the street.

Hang one restored suitcase in the window each week. The street stops to look.

The story is in the detail, and how we share it. Consistency of touch.

Master artisan illness or absence

Apprentice is trained from day one on the full book of stitches; a trusted Graz artisan on call for overflow weeks.

Low-ticket bleed (people wanting it cheap)

A published minimum of €35; anything below is is pro bono Saturdays for a charity. Pricing stays honest.

Vintage-leather sourcing

Three tanneries on rolling contract — Bologna, Graz, Ljubljana. Backup hides always on the wall. Never turn a client away empty.

Honest craft requires honest pricing, from hide to hand.

Europe is drowning in new leather nobody wants. Fast fashion, fast fittings, fast trash.

Every Ljubljana grandmother has a bag in a closet worth keeping.

CUIR 9 is one walnut door in Trnovo for the bags of this city to grow older, not be replaced.

No new collection. No seasons. Just a room where the Singer hums and the smell of beeswax lingers.

Repair is the new luxury.
