CRYO3

Anna, 34 — Södermalm

marathon runner · hips ache after long runs, the cold chamber lets her train twice a week again.

Mikael, 41 — Vasastan · architect

stress builds under deadline, three minutes here resets his sleep for sleep for two nights.

Linnea, 58 — Östermalm

returning to yoga after a hip replacement · cold eases morning inflammation, she books a monthly pass.

three different lives · one short ritual · same calm on the walk home

Running clubs · Södermalm loop · free trial after long Sunday runs.

We don't advertise.
We show up with tea.

Monthly letter · one story per month · one recipe for ginger syrup.

no emojis · unsubscribe in one click.

Instagram · one photograph a week · captions in lower-case.

never reels · never promo grids.

Physiotherapist partners · two clinics · shared voucher pad.

handwritten referrals.

word-of-mouth is the only marketing budget that compounds

honest risks · calm answers

the chamber breaks down for a week

— we keep a service contract with the manufacturer, a backup compressor, and a three-day loaner agreement. Clients get vouchers, not excuses.

winter slowdown in January and February

— we design a winter membership with spa partners, a family gift card, and one physiotherapy Zoom workshop a month to keep the room warm.

a client feels unwell after a session

— pre-session vitals, a documented medical questionnaire, an on-call advisor, and a clear no-go protocol for blood pressure above the threshold.

risks discussed out loud · not hidden behind a brochure

We live faster than our bodies can catch up.
Cold asks us to slow down for three minutes,
and gives back two nights of sleep.
This is not biohacking.
This is an old Nordic idea, built into a room your neighbour can walk into.

a quiet ritual, held in a small room
