who comes back · three listeners

Anna & Péter · Buda · ‘a first-birthday gift that won’t end up in landfill’

Grandmother Ilonka · Eger · ‘wants the old toys back — the ones with soul’

A young architect · Pest · ‘buys one for his studio shelf — it comforts him’

the shop is small — but the customers carry the stories outward four channels · no social-media-ization of the craft

Row 1 · Instagram @jatek_26 one post per new carving · wood, chisel, curls

Row 2 · In-shop window display rotates every Sunday with a new little scene

Row 3 · Budapest weekend markets (Szimpla, Gozsdu) two markets a month · brings new hands into the shop

Row 4 · Website · catalog + mail-order free local delivery · shipping in Europe

our reach is narrow — the story travels in the toy itself

three risks · three answers handmade production does not scale → answer: intentionally limited to ~180 pieces/month — scarcity is part of the story

cheap mass-market toys dominate retail → answer: we sell to those who already reject mass — the message is the filter

---

Hungarian market is small → answer: shop is 30% tourists · 40% locals · 30% mail-order across EU

Wood was once a living thing. A child's first possession should share that life. We carve one-by-one, name every piece, and send it home with the date. Twenty-six square metres in Belváros, Budapest, where toys are made in front of those who buy them.
